In the sequence diagram, the primary focus is on internal system communication, including interactions among the application, the server, the database, and the printers. The application and the server remain active throughout the printing process, while the database completes its actions after providing the list of printers. As expected, the printers join the process at a later stage and become inactive after the printing is completed.